

“Drive safe” my mother said as I walked out the door
I never knew it’d be the last thing I heard from her
I wish I’d be able to hear her once more
“Drive safe”; I should have listened
Believe it when they say your mother is always right
I should have taken her advice and driven safe that night
I went to a party with all of my friends
I never would have imagined that this would be the end
I drank at this party, although I knew it was wrong
I should have called for a ride, but the drive wasn’t long
As I got in the car and turned the radio on
I played it really loud, it was my favorite song
I guess I got distracted and my vision was blurred
I’m sorry Mom, but I just hit the curb
Now I’ve hit the tree after I panicked and swerved
I hear faint sirens and see blurred flashing lights
I don’t know what I was thinking when I insisted on driving home tonight
My lesson has been learned, don’t drink and drive
If only I listened, I might still be alive.
