

Drinking and Driving

Drinking and Driving is very deadly. Nearly half of the teenage deaths are because of drunk driving. I personally know that drinking and driving is deadly. My Cousin sadly got killed in a head on collision about five years ago. I was so saddened by the news. My whole family felt so sad. But for me it was different. I was angry. When I found out the other person was drunk I wanted to freak out! Why would someone drink and drive taking my cousins life away from her! It's not fair to us! But instead of freaking out I sat down and thought about what happened. It was hard to think about but I wanted to know the reason why the other driver decided to drive even though they knew they were drunk. I started doing some research on what goes through a drunk drivers head before they drive and I found out that most of them believe that they can drive. They persuade their friends into thinking that they can drive. Even though they can barely walk. Clearly you aren't going to be able to drive straight. Please! Please! If you see someone who is drunk don't allow him or her into the drivers seat of a car. Nothing good is going to come from it. Death is not a good thing. I know first hand how bad it is. I lost my cousin and I'm never going to get her back. Just because some guy thought he was fine to drive. They story is that my cousin was going to work as a nurse and when she was going to a major route in Maine a driver crossed the center line and slammed head on into her. He ended up surviving but she died instantly. I can't imagine surviving and knowing you killed someone. How can he live with himself! I know I couldn't deal with that. Maybe though it was a learning experience for him. Maybe next time he'll think it more through next time before he gets into the drivers seat drunk. Hopefully he could stop other people from drinking a driving. That might to much to wish for. You never know. People change. Hopefully he did.
