

It was a dark and cold Friday night

It was Pouring Raining, which would soon turn into snow.

As i'm driving on the way to my friends house, I get a text from my friend

“Are you on your way?”

Part of me tells me to answer it for it would only take 5 seconds.

The other part of me tells me to just wait till I get to his house.

As I look down at the text, I get tempted and I start typing.

In the background is the sound of rain, pounding on my windshield like it's giving me a sign.

Next thing I know i'm in the other lane, blinded by a light I know will kill me.

Now all I have has caused is pain for my family, and loved ones.

And cemented myself forever as another death caused by texting and driving.

It only took 5 seconds.

The 5 seconds could have waited.

But instead, that one text took my life.

Don't text and drive.
