The School Bag

The anguish among Harveys head as if something was picking something from his brain, he couldn't move. Stuck in between the ground and the seat, his car had been flipped over. Being unable to move he sat there not knowing what would happen. Blood was getting into Harveys eyes, but he couldn't move his arms; it was as if all the nerves in them disintegrated. He knew he needed help with his phone being nowhere around. He started screaming for help. Calling for his mother... nobody answered, it was dark all he could hear was crickets piercing his ears it felt as if the Cricket was behind a megaphone. Glass was everywhere overwhelming him, thinking he needed to stay awake not knowing if he would go into shock or not. What did he do wrong, why is he in the position he's in right now, he ruined his life, what would his parents think? Harvey was more worried about what his parents thought but couldn't keep his eyes open. He was tired. He wanted to sleep.

Gorham, ME. Boy Dies After Fatal Car Crash

He was coming from a friend's house with thunder and lightning cracking the trees around him. He was worried. Then he got a text from mom "Where are you, are you still at your friends house, If so please stay there. Bad storm." He read it and put his phone down. Another text comes 3 minutes later from his friend saying "you forgot your School bag". Looking up from his phone, he's already sliding, unable to recover the wheel he ends up crashing causing the animals to flurry away. I read this on twitter a day later. He was my best friend, I had no idea. That one glance of the phone after a text can be catastrophic. This is a very preventable thing that doesn't need to happen by just not looking at your phone while driving. Life is more important than a text even a glance at the phone, people care about you dont make the stupid decision that can change a life. Arrive alive.
