

Timmy's older brother Steve, has just gotten his new car for his 18th birthday. A brand new bright red Toyota corolla, with clean new rims and that new car smell. Steve has been waiting to find a reason to use his new car and try out its new stereo system. It just so happens that Timmy has to be driven to school that morning.

Timmy's mom Brenda, works for a real estate agency and has a big house to sell to clients early in the morning, so she can't drive Timmy. This also means that Brenda would have to use the family car. With Steve knowing this he more than willingly accepted to drive his brother to school for the day.

Although, neither one of the brothers nor Timmy's mom were to know what was to come of that morning. Timmy grabs his bag and gets in the car waiting for his brother to finish getting ready. Timmy enters the car and is hit with a cold gust of air from the car running. Timmy's brother had already turned the car on and let the car run for a few minutes. Timmy's brother comes outside and starts to drive Timmy to school.

While on his way to school Timmy's older brother gets a call from Obama. Timmy's older brother scrambles his phone into his hands, Steve feels as if he has to answer it so he does. Obama wants Steve to come to the white house right away.

While he picks up the phone though, the truck on the other side of the road starts to swerve. Timmy is hit directly by the truck and instantly killed. It ends up hitting the new car, shattering the passenger side of the car. The car is in pieces with the truck driver unconscious, emergency services are called. Timmy does die and Timmy's older brother survives. The truck driver got arrested for driving drunk and reckless driving. Timmy's brother now deals with the guilt of the death of his younger brother. If Timmy's brother didn't pick the phone up, and the driver was intoxicated while driving then he could have dodged the truck and Timmy would most likely be alive.
