

Untimely Conversation

“You know I won’t do anything bad at the party, please let me go,” Brittney said pleading to her mom, Michelle. Knowing completely well teenagers can hardly ever control themselves, Michelle decided to go ahead and trust her daughter. She only did this because Brittany is a good kid.

“I will let you go, on one condition.”

“What is it? Whatever it is, I will do it!”

“You must be back by 11:00 and if I smell any alcohol in your breath then you are never going to another party again. Got it.”

“Completely, it won’t happen I promise.”

Before Michelle could say anything else Brittany was already out the door. Her mom immediately texted Brittany saying “Drive safely, I love you.” Although Brittany didn’t see the text right away, her mom didn’t put much thought into it and forgot about that fact.

As Brittany was driving she picked her red phone to see that her mom had texted her. She replies with a quick “Don’t worry I will, I love you too” and continues to drive to the party. Oddly the mother receives a call at 8:00 from the hospital nearby.

“Ma’am are you Michelle Baret?”

“Yes this is she”

“Your daughter has gotten into an accident and is being rushed to the E.D. It looks like she was texting while driving...”

It turns out Brittany had never made it to the party.

While Brittany was trying to text her mom she swerved into the other lane and went into a head on collision with the oncoming traffic. With her phone flying out of her hand and slamming into the dashboard she was knocked unconscious instantaneously. Both cars crumpled into a mash of metal almost looking like one long car. There was blood all over the place and the end for her was near.

“She doesn't have a heartbeat, there was nothing we could do. Sorry.”